Warm November

The winter started way too early in October with snow and cold. Since November started the weather sure has been nice. It's a good thing because if it wouldn't have warmed up it would have made for a long cold winter. Every warm day just brings us that much closer to spring. The older I've gotten the less I like the cold and shoveling snow.

We still haven't got to pre-covid staff levels. We can't seem to find a tech that will work meeting our standards. If you know someone looking, ask them to send a resume to me at lance@lanproauto.com. Because of this it's taken longer to be able to get your vehicles in. I want you to know we are trying very hard to solve this.

LT Tires: Work Hard, Play Hard

Today's light truck owners expect a lot from their tires.

There used to be a time when light trucks were thought of as work vehicles. No one even considered commuting to their office job in a truck, let alone using it to simply run out for groceries or take the kids to school.

Today, however, light trucks are used by those who want to both work hard and play hard. Fleets and contractors buy light trucks because they need vehicles that can carry or tow a significant load, even in rough terrain. Consumers buy them because they like the commanding view and the off-road readiness that light trucks promise.

This trend, in turn, is having an impact on the type of tires manufacturers are bringing to market. "With all these new trucks in the market being used as daily commuting vehicles, ride quality for new trucks has improved greatly over the last decade," explains Brad Robison, Senior Product Manager of Bridgestone Product Strategy. "New trucks drive and feel more like cars than they used to, and tires are a critical component of the vehicle's suspension."

The evolution of the light truck has pushed tire manufacturers to offer LT tires with enhanced ride quality, responsiveness, and better overall performance, Robison adds.

Not only do truck owners want a better ride, but they also want tires that can do more. Comfortable highway driving is no longer enough. Tires have to look good and they have to be able to handle some rough terrain. "More and more of these trucks come with all-terrain tires [rather than] highway tires," Robison adds. "We are seeing consumers gravitating towards outdoor hobbies like camping, hiking, and off-roading, and vehicle manufacturers are taking notice, offering more off-road packages on trucks, SUVs, and even smaller CUVs."

Ready for winter

Consumers may want to off-road and go camping in the summer, but when the leaves start to fall off the trees and the white stuff starts to fall from the sky, they want light truck tires that can handle the ice and the snow. That's why we're seeing a growing number of LT tires with the 3 Peak Mountain Snowflake (3PMS) logo on them.

"A growing number of pick-up truck owners don't want to change over to winter tires in the cold months," explains James McIntyre, VP of Sales, Canada for Sailun Tire America. "So tire manufacturers that don't make a 3PMS AT (all-terrain) tire or a 3PMS RT (rugged-terrain) tire are not going to sell in this market."

And while individual consumers may be happy with a light truck tire that'll get them through all four seasons without the need to swap out their tires before winter, McIntyre says that fleet customers who use their trucks for real work may expect tires that can do even more. "They probably want LT tires that are studded, so they can handle construction zones and the like," he says.

Fleet customers and contractors also expect LT tires that can handle situations where they'll need to carry heavy cargo or haul heavy trailers. "That's why we have both 10ply in our standard LT fitments and why we added 12-ply to our flotation sizes," McIntyre adds. "This allows the tire to handle more air pressure, which makes it more stable when hauling heavier cargo."
